The Collision of Small Wars and Cyber Wars

By Dave Dilegge
SWJ Blog Post | Dec 11 2010 - 8:56am

The collision of small wars and cyber wars is not a wikileaked Internet by Sam Liles at his blog Selil. BLUF: "It is not supported through research or evaluation that the events of Wikileaks and Anonymous rise to the level of cyber warfare. Hyperbole though fully invested within the press does not provide the evidence of the act. Annoying, destructive, and likely criminal would all describe the attacks perpetrated by the Anonymous group. It is not in the best interest of the United States population to lower the bar of war to the point these acts could be described as war."

About the Author

Dave Dilegge

Dave Dilegge is Editor-in-Chief of Small Wars Journal and serves as a Director at Small Wars Foundation. He is a retired USMCR Intelligence and Counterintelligence/HUMINT officer, and former USMC civilian intelligence analyst, as well as a defense consultant in the private sector.

Contact Dave at dave@smallwarsjournal.com.

Available online at: http://smallwarsjournal.com/blog/the-collision-of-small-wars-and-cyber-wars

Links:
{1} http://smallwarsjournal.com/author/dave-dilegge
{2} http://selil.com/?p=1693
{3} http://smallwarsjournal.com/comment/reply/9972#comment-form

Copyright © 2015, Small Wars Foundation.

Select uses allowed by Creative Commons BY-NC-SA 3.0 license per our Terms of Use.
Please help us support the Small Wars Community.